

Does Serenity Legal Services represent creditors too?

Serenity Legal Services is a full-service bankruptcy law firm. While the vast majority of cases we handle involve those who need to file bankruptcy themselves (known as "debtors" under the law), we are also experienced in representing those who are owed money by individuals and companies who file bankruptcy. Over the years, we have protected the interests of such entities as:

1. Divorcing spouses and ex-spouses who find themselves dragged into bankruptcy cases by financial malfeasance of their former mates;
2. Small and large lenders who hold liens on property owned or held by someone who files bankruptcy, and want to recover on their collateral;
3. Individuals who have been defrauded by people who file bankruptcy, and want to get the debt arising from that fraud excepted from the bankruptcy discharge; and
4. Bankruptcy trustees who are in charge of assembling a bankrupt's assets and turning them into cash with which to pay creditors.

A truly superior lawyer knows not only how to view a case from his or her client's perspective, but also the perspective of potential opposing parties. At Serenity Legal Services, we're REALLY good at working with people in bankruptcy -- be they debtor or creditor -- because we know both what our clients need and what stumbling blocks others may try to put in their paths. You can't see the whole picture, unless you look at all of its many sides.
